Tips For Students

Imagine you are in a coffee shop chatting with your younger peer, and that person is interested in following your steps and being in your position, and you would like that person to hit the key activities, or take certain additional classes during their undergraduate years to be a competitive student and/or candidate in their future career applications, what would you recommend them to do?

Answers to this question are very important to those who are in their undergraduate years deciding their future career options. Here you will find statements from recent graduates from the University of Pittsburgh who are now in postgraduate programs, e.g., Masters, PhDs, internships at National Laboratories, Medical School, etc., and also from students who went for jobs in industry right after finishing their undergraduate degree.

We hope TFS will help you facilitate your decisions going forward in your career, and hopefully one day you will help others by sharing your story.

Sincerely,
